Description:

The UNIBE Global Health certificate addresses health within research, teaching and cooperation in local, international and interdisciplinary fields. One of the main objectives of the program is to create and disseminate knowledge in accordance with the advances of science and the latest technologies, with a profoundly humanistic orientation.

Among its objectives are also to offer and disseminate technological, scientific and cultural activities that promote social welfare; promote knowledge of national and international health systems; carry out activities that contribute to human promotion, global economic development, social welfare and the strengthening of global health systems; to train high level human resources with a global health perspective that are able to analyze the public health challenges worldwide and manage to respond in a timely manner.

A certificate program is a continuing education offering that provides the skills needed for career advancement or entering into a new field. Aside from mastering a new topic, certificate programs help participants reach their professional and educational objectives, such as switching careers, staying up-to-date or specializing in a certain subject in your field.
